Daylight Saving Time Begins

March 10, 2:00am

It's time to lose the extra hour of sleep! Daylight Saving time in the United States is the practice of setting the clock forward by one hour in March and one hour backward in November, so that evenings have more daylight and mornings have less. We casually call this "Spring forward" and "Fall back". Most cell phones and computers that use WiFi or networks should change automatically. However, plug-in or battery clocks, microwaves and other non-networked devices should be manually adjusted on Saturday night/Sunday morning (ex.- if it is "11:00pm", change to "10:00pm").

The "Spring Forward" begins on Sunday, March 10th, 2013 at 2 a.m. Remember to set your clocks 1 hour ahead.
